TERRITORIAL.

From our Exchanges.

Rich mining developments are reported eight miles west of Tucson.

The Benson smelter will start up in two weeks. Everything points to a success in the enterprise.

The young man who drives the stage between Enterprise Station and Pinal had his collar bone broken, Tuesday, by a vicious mare.

A ton of ore shipped from the Reward mine, Casa Grande district, to Denver recently, sold for $50 per ton in silver and 26 per cent. copper. That is good ore.

Gen. Crook has left Prescott for southern Arizona via Fort Verde, Tonto Basin and San Carlos reservation. He goes mule-back, accompanied by aid-de-camp Rourke.

The mountains of Yavapai are filled with the representatives of capitalists who are eagerly scanning the rocks, seeking places where capital can be invested without fear of failure.

Five cases of rifles with the necessary ammunition and accoutrements from Bencha arsenal, and addressed to Gov. Triffin, have arrived and been consigned to the care of L. Zerkendorf & Co., for safe keeping pending their proper disposal.

Recently at Chino brook, on the A. & P. railroad, a big iron mine, "Scorpion," was found. It is the only one of the kind in the territory. The mine is owned by Messrs. Arthur H. Hays and Thomas, who bought it from Prescott and put him in charge of the sheriff.

From a reliable party the Independent learns that three skeletons were found in a canyon a few miles from Charleston, a short time since. They are supposed to be the bleaching remains of three horse-thieves whom a party went after not long ago, and returning, reported their inability to find them.

One of the very hardest woods known is the desert iron wood tree which grows in the dry washes in Arizona. Its specific gravity is nearly the same as that of lignum vitae, and its black heart is so hard, when seasoned, that it will turn the edge of an ax, and can scarcely be cut with a well tempered saw.

Efforts are being made to establish a postoffice at Clarksburg, the new station between Tombstone and Charleston. There are about one hundred persons in the neighborhood at present and the prospects of the mines indicate that a much larger number will be there in the near future. As the additional expense to the postal department will be nominal, no doubt the request will be granted.

From the report of J. J. Williams, superintendent of the Old Globe Company, the Tombstone Republican summarizes the following statistics: From September 2 to 8, inclusive, the product was 394 bars, weighing 105,795 pounds, which is an average of a little more than 7½ tons bullion per day. The total product to September 8 is 932,270 pounds; total shipments, 741,933 pounds; on hand, 190,337 pounds.

Hands up.

"Gentleman will please throw up their hands." Such is the polite manner in which a Western train robber usually addresses a car load of passengers as he appears at the door, playfully covering them with a revolver extended in each hand. Perhaps there is a party engaged in a game of eucree or old sledge; they promptly throw up their hands without a murmur, no matter how interesting a crisis there may be in the game. Men partially paralyzed in their arms have been known to throw up their hands at this summons with an alacrity surprising to themselves and everybody else.

"Throw up your hands!" said a man who was relating an experience with train robbers that he had been through. "I had $10,000 in a belt around my body, all that I had in six years of mining life in California, and when I heard the command and realized how useless resistance was as the gang surrounding the car was armed to the teeth. I not only threw up my hands, but the thought of losing my money made me so sick, that I nearly threw up my boots!"

The situation doesn't admit of a moment's hesitation and every man knows it. A movement in the direction of a weapon would not escape the alert eye of the robber; and it would be the immediate signal for a shot. Brave men think and braggers boast of what they would do under such circumstances, but when suddenly confronted by a cocked revolver and the stern command that signifies surrender, the hands are very apt to go up, though the situation be a humiliating one. Such attacks are generally made at night, while most of the passengers are asleep and off guard, and the result is the universal loss of their money.

The fellow stood on the platform of a car and coolly exchanged six or eight shots with the gang. Admiring his bravery, Jesse shouted to him to cease firing and they wouldn't molest his car. "I'll bet you won't," said he, "while I'm here." The robber captain said he would have given $5000 to have had that man become a member of his gang. But he did not consider that a man, brave as a lion on the side of right, might prove the veriest coward in advancing the standing of violence and wrong.

He Named the Mine for Her

A young and enthusiastic prospector returned to this city yesterday from Wood River, looking bronzed and weather-beaten. He hadn't proceeded far on his way home before he met his sweetheart going to the depot to meet him.

Why, George you look just like an old smoked ham," were the endearing words that greeted him.

George had been living on ham for the past two months, and when his girl referred to that article he didn't know but there was something hoggy-looking about him.

"Nothing near or hoggyish about me, Jane; bet your bangs on that. Found a mine up in Wood River and named it Jane, after you."

"What are you giving me, dear George? What do you take me for?"

"Fret, Jane; named it after you."

"How jealous that'll make the other girls in the Fifteenth Ward. Won't their bangs curl down their forehead? Won't the green-eyed monster rankle in their bosoms, though? Oh you're so nice, dear George."

And Jane laughed all over and insisted upon carrying his blankets and the grip-sack.

"That's all right, Jane; carry this overcoat, too."

"How did you come to name the mine after me, you too-too-too George?"

"Because it didn't amount to anything. Nothing in it, Jane."

When the grip-sack came down on his head George thought a snowslide had struck him, and he swears he will never name another mine after a Salt Lake girl—Salt Lake Tribune.

The ridicule cast upon that new-fangled device—the President's flag—recalls an anecdote concerning bluff old Ironsides Farragut. When Vice-Admiral Porter was in high feather in the Navy Department during Grant's earlier administration, and had his eye on the possible succession at some day to the chief command of the navy, he brained out an ensign for the Admiral, who at that time was the hero Farragut. The standard was an odd looking affair, and suggested the British cross of St. George as much as anything. The first time the ensign was raised on a shipboard with the head of the ensign flying over the mast at Mobile Bay, the ensign caught his eye as he stood up to the flag, so the story goes, he angrily demanded: "What do you call that gridiron thing up there?" Somebody told him that it was the newly devised Admiral's flag.

"Who ordered it to be hoisted?" he again asked. He was informed that Vice-Admiral Porter had.

"Take that rag down at once," he thundered. "The stars and stripes are good enough for me." Admiral Porter's gridiron came down with a run, and this was the first and last time it was ever unfurled. — Philadelphia Times.

The Old, Old Story.

The other night (observed Mary Jane, who has been visiting Grayson Spring), I overheard a real pretty piece of love's labor won, and it made my heart beat faster and brought back memories of the past it happened down on the dark end of the piazza, next to my open window: "Who do you love?" said he, ungrammatically.

"Papa," said she innocently, with a coo.

"Who else?" said he.

"Mamma," said she.

"Who else?"

"Brother."

"Who else?"

"Sister."

"Who else?"

"Uncle."
